The Arqus Joint Master's Programme European Studies is a full-time, two-year programme (120 ECTS) offered entirely in English and jointly delivered by the universities of Granada, Graz, Leipzig, and Vilnius under the umbrella of the Arqus European University Alliance. It brings together the expertise and academic excellence of these four partners to examine Europe in a global context — how Europe acts, is perceived, and is challenged — by exploring the relationship between Europeanisation and globalisation, the role of the EU and its institutions, Europe's neighbours, the interaction between EU and non-EU states, and the effects of global politics and global developments on European societies and governments.

Students receive comprehensive training in European integration, EU governance, and institutions; comparative politics, international relations, and foreign policy analysis; political economy and socio-economic transformations; the legal and policy dimensions of the EU and its external action; regional studies focusing on Europe's neighbourhoods and global partnerships; and rigorous research methods, including qualitative and quantitative approaches, academic writing, and project design.

The programme develops intercultural communication and multilingual competencies, teamwork in international settings, policy analysis and advocacy skills, stakeholder engagement, and an informed understanding of ethics, sustainability, and digital competences relevant to European public life. Organised as a joint degree programme within the Arqus Alliance, it offers complementary focus areas and a distinctive intercultural learning experience supported by an international student cohort and mobility within the consortium.

Implementing this programme has been an exciting journey through the challenging years of the pandemic. Following successful accreditation under the European Approach, the first cohort of the Arqus Alliance's inaugural joint degree programme commenced in the 2023/24 academic year. We are now proud to celebrate our first graduates, and with them, the success of the programme.
